In New England, flu season usually does not begin until December and doesn't peak until January or February. In fact, flu vaccination can and should continue through January and beyond, as long as vaccine is available.

The VNA cautions that anyone who has had an allergic reaction to eggs, gelatin or a previous dose of influenza vaccine should not get a flu shot. People who have a fever, and those who have a history of Guillain-Barre Syndrome should talk to their doctor before getting a flu shot.
